Foreningen for Fleksibel Uddannelse i Danmark (FLUID), IDA Education og Nordiskt Nätverk för Vuxnas Lärande (NVL) afholder Nordisk konference i København den 3. – 4. juni 2019.

About the Conference

The overall focus of the conference is on when distance learning works. Based on an examination of the positive or absent results of a number of previous distance-learning projects, we are putting new projects into perspective in relation to what we have learned from the experience. Form, content, audiences, technologies, logistics etc. are in focus. In order to get as broad an experience as possible, we will present Nordic experiences and project initiatives.

The two full days includes presentations from researchers as well as workshops where conference participants can discuss the presentations and share their own experiences. The main aim of the conference is to provide all participants with an increased knowledge of what is needed to make sure that distance learning is relevant and successful.

The conference spans over two days with a wide audience in mind. Many actors need to improve their distance learning pathways in order to achieve success. It is quite likely that some conclusions relate to the weakest link that is crucial to the success of distance-learning training. We will therefore look at incentives from the business community supporting local distance-learning courses. We also expect there will be some focus on the educational institutions themselves.; What kind of skills and educational concepts should they provide? Finally, we will take a look at the learners; What motivates them, and what makes them drop out? After all, they are the ones who sign up and carry out the learning.

The target group for the conference is managers from companies that need employees, managers and teachers from educational institutions as well as politicians who seek for development in their local area.
